May General Meeting

FWGS member Judy Ramos is speaking at the May General Meeting in the Tandy Auditorium of the Central Branch FW Library. She will bring us "Using Social Media in Your Genealogy." The meeting will be on Tuesday evening, May 26th at 6:30 p.m. Please plan to attend and find out what we can find in this extensive archive in "our own backyard."

Judy Everett Ramos has been an amateur genealogist since she was 11 years old. But since 2008, she has done much of her research online and has met many "new" relatives along the way. Judy is a member of the NSDAR, NSUSD 1812, DRT, and Texas First Families. Judy is a Corpus Christi, Texas native, but she has traced her roots around the globe through several family lines. She has written for Everett Generations and Alabama Pioneers websites and she is a Find A Grave contributor. She is a former newspaper, television, and radio reporter and currently works in public relations when she is not working on genealogy. Follow her on Twitter @ancestrysleuth.

Bring a friend.

From the President.....

April showers are turning into May flowers and more showers.

My thoughts lately have been consumed with our Annual FWGS Summer Seminar. We recently were dealt a blow—Trinity Terrace Towers has declined to have us back, due to a new construction project underway. We have been scrambling for a new location and new speaker. I think it is finally coming together and hope to announce it very soon. The only thing I can say right now, is that our date has changed, most likely to mid September. So plan to indulge in our new End of Summer Seminar and bring a friend.

[Please disregard the "Save the date" notice in last month's newsletter. It is now incorrect.]

GENEALOGY on TV

Unfortunately, Genealogy Roadshow and Who Do You Think You Are have both finished their recent seasons. But the good news is you can find them (and Finding Your Roots, as well) on YouTube. Search for full episodes from past seasons.

Ancestry News

When the 1940 census was first released and then indexed, genealogists rejoiced. It opened up a new end of genealogy for many. We had been so focused on our distant ancestors and now we could focus on our nearer ancestors. And not only could we trace our direct lines, but could begin to really branch out to the thousands of cousins and collaterals. The 1940 census left us wanting more; to keep following those families into the 1950's and beyond. Unfortunately, those censuses will not be released for many years yet. Fortunately, Ancestry has a great resource to fill in the gaps. City Directories!

City directories being on ancestry.com is not new. The old ones were first scanned and indexed using OCR technology. It was not perfect, but an advancement at the time. Now, newer methods are available and better available to index. Ancestry is in the process of rolling over all older directories and other records of that type into their new Beta version. It will be changing continually until the project is finished. This is how it appears when you look for it in the Card Catalog under Search. U.S. City Directories, 1821-1989 \(Beta\)

Amazing things can be found in City Directories (and that found not all are of Cities. Sometimes a directory was done in a rural county which included several tiny communities.) You can find names and relationships (husband, wife, widow), addresses, occupations, and in more modern ones phone numbers or even birthdates. This can lead to tracking movements, wealth, status or even a death or divorce (when a spouse disappears. Directories in large cities were done yearly, while censuses are every ten years. Directories and advertisements can lead to clues of what happened to families and provides a fascinating view into life in that community in another day and time. Directories can help to fill in the missing gaps with the missing 1890 US Census. And in the modern City Directories, finding a birth date is a treasure when a state does not have open birth data bases for the years you need. Just keep in mind, some of the information in directories is wrong.

Ancestry recommends you check one of the many ways they offer to find out about new databases there. There is the What's New tab, many social media blogs or sites (Twitter, YouTube, Facebook, etc) and there are free webinars and web streaming sessions. There is even a video explaining these City Directories. Here is the link:

Researching in New York?

The highly anticipated New York Family History Research Guide and Gazetteer published by the New York Genealogical and Biographical Society is finally here. At over 800 pages and with over 100 experts on New York families and research collaborating together, this work will be THE book to guide your research in the Empire State.

Half of the book covers 17 chapters worth of topics ranging from the Colonial Era to Immigration, Naturalization, Religion, Court records, Cemeteries, New York Repositories, NY Reference Works and so much more. The Second Half focuses on a guide for each county with maps and gazetteers. There is also a large index to help find information quickly.

The book is available now from NYG&B for $85. Libraries and Societies may purchase it for $75. And NYG&B members may purchase it for $65. It might be worth your effort to join the society for a year and see what other benefits the society might offer to you. All orders add $10 for shipping and handling. To read more about it and to order this work, see below:

And closer to home in Texas.....

Johnie Lee is soliciting pre-publication orders for his work in Red River County, Texas. This work is an attempt to help the researcher find families in the 1890 time period because the 1890 US Federal Census no longer exists. His work seems to be exhaustive. It contains 253 pages, with an index containing over 5,900 entries, and approximately 12,000 entries in the census section. Some of these individuals were found in as many as five different sources, all listed for future reference. Red River County in 1890 – The Year of the Missing Census sounds like a promising work for any interested in Red River county, 1890. Johnie expects the pre-pub price to be between $ 30.00 and $40.00. Contact him now at johnie_lee@hotmail.com [underscore after johnie and before lee]
